

Some errant points or how I learnt to itemize my slide in Edinburgh

- What makes the most for success in scientific life?
  - Is it the instant ability of grasping problems and the relevance of solutions?
  - Is it well-balanced, unflinching energy in combining many aspects and strategies?

Hard to say — especially if you look at someone with an extra amount of both.

- What makes for a great research group?
Again, hard to say — although good people, lots of work and a perfect acronym may help.
- Conclusions?
All you can draw and more ... sorry — this slide is overfull :-)

A cheer to premisses conclusions can't delete — the sort of Alan has given us plenty of.
